SIUE Police report decline in number of vehicle burglaries

Only 33 vehicle burglaries reported so far this year, 51 less than October 2007

by Jeremy Clinton
Alestle Reporter

The amount of motor vehicle burglaries at SIUE has decreased significantly in 2008, according to SIUE Police records, with only 33 motor vehicle burglaries reported so far this year, compared with 84 burglaries at the same time in 2007.

In total, 100 motor vehicle burglaries were reported in 2007, 40 of them without any type of forced entry. Many of the burglaries involved stolen parking tags and CDs.

SIUE Police Chief Gina Hays said she attributes part of the decrease to luck, but mainly to informing the SIUE community.

"We've really campaigned to educate people," Hays said. "We've found that a lot of people just leave their doors unlocked."

Hays said the police urged students not to leave things out in the open.

"Don't leave your Coach purse and your CDs and your GPS and your cell phone laying in plain view," Hays said.

Hays said the SIUE community has also done its part by working with SIUE Police and Parking Services to keep their eyes open.

"We've done well educating everyone to be the eyes and the ears of the university," Hays said.

The SIUE Police Department reported three different vehicle burglaries on the SIUE campus in the past three weeks, with more than eight in the past month, according to SIUE police records.

The burglaries have occurred all over campus and vary in method. Some were forced entry while others involved taking plates and parts off of cars.

At 10:13 a.m. on Sept. 14, SIUE Police responded to a call after a passer-by in the Bluff Hall Lot noticed a shattered car window. The police reported that the car's CD player was ripped out and left on the ground while the face of the CD unit was stolen.

Four days later the front license plate was taken off the front of a truck, and a day later a student reported that their vehicle was broken into at Lot 4D. There was no sign of forced entry, but a GPS unit and CDs were taken from the vehicle.

SIUE Police Lt. Kevin Schmoll said simple steps can be taken to better protect your car and possessions.

"The first thing you should do is lock your car and roll up your windows, and take with you valuable possessions," Schmoll said. "If you have to leave anything in your car, put it in the trunk."

Schmoll said putting items of value in the trunk of the vehicle is a safe idea, since it is twice as hard for an intruder to break into the trunk as the car itself.

Sophomore education major Kayla Steward said she takes matters into her own hands.

"I carry all my valuable possessions with me," Steward said. "I feel safer that way, and

Registration for spring 2009 classes begins Oct.13

By Ben McDonald
Alestle Correspondent

Students who have not made an appointment with their advisers might want to consider doing so soon. With senior registration beginning next week, classes could fill up fast.

For seniors, students with 90 or more hours, registration begins on Oct. 13. Registration for juniors, students with 60 or more hours, begins on Oct. 20. Sophomore registration begins on Oct. 27 for students with 30 or more hours.

Open registration begins on Nov. 3 and is open to all students for freshman and anyone else who has not yet registered for the spring semester.

Cheryl Tucker Lowe, acting director of Academic Counseling and Advising, said this does not mean student should wait until their designated date to make appointments with their advisers. All students must make advising appointments before their registration.

"Declared students should make their appointment through their department adviser, undeclared students should make their appointment through AdviserTrac," Tucker Lowe said. "Preferably, students should make their appointment before their registration begins so they can register as early as they can."

Undeclared students are required to bring an academic advising schedule planning worksheet, available through the academic advising Web site, for the spring semester. New this year is a four-year plan worksheet that helps students understand why they are taking classes and how courses will help them in the future and a follow up worksheet students must complete.

Tucker Lowe said that the four-year plan help

Alcohol Awareness Week informs students about the effects of drinking

by Soni Kumar
Alestle Reporter

For many students, drinking is part of the college lifestyle, and beginning Monday, Counseling Services plans to educate students on the dangers of alcohol with Alcohol Awareness Week.

Counseling Services graduate assistant Zac Hill is coordinating the week full of activities and games to educate the student body about alcohol abuse.

"It's a way to educate and inform the student body about the dangers of alcohol use and just about alcohol," Hill said. "We are trying to change from the old fire and brimstone way and try to make it more fun and interactive."

On Monday, there will be inflatable jousting on the Stratton Quadrangle. One opponent will have to wear beer goggles and the other opponent will not. Free Fitz root beer will also be provided to students.

On Tuesday and Wednesday in the Morris University Center's Goshen Lounge, there will be computers set up for alcohol screening tests, as well as free T-shirts.

"You can see your drinking habits and compare it to your peers," Hill said.

On Thursday, Hill said there will be a DUI simulator near Hairpin Drive.

"It's an interactive vehicle that fits 12 people inside and takes you through one night of excessive drinking, showing the catastrophic consequences of drinking," Hill said.

According to Hill, drinking is a growing concern around campus, especially since the controversy about possibly lowering the drinking age to 18. Hill said students need to be aware of consequences that they may face.

students understand "what they want to do here at SIUE and how they are going to accomplish that."

Tucker Lowe said advisers are beneficial to students when it comes to understand the reason for taking their classes.

"It has really helped everyone involved with the system," Tucker Lowe said. "Students and advisers can work together. Instead of concentrating on what class they are taking and when, advisers work with students to understand why they are taking a class."

Student Service Center worker Shanon Hudson said students should make sure their account is free of all holds before they try to register for classes, as well as make sure the class does not require any pre-requisites, a certain declared major or a professor's approval.

"If a student is on academic probation they are only allowed to take 12 hours," Hudson said. "Students in an honors program are allowed to take 21 hours, otherwise students can take up to 19 hours. Sometimes a student doesn't realize how many hours they are allowed to take and are surprised when they are refused a class."

Hudson said if students should have any questions they either come in or call the student service center.

Freshman Jeannie Gapsch of St. Louis said she is ready to register Nov. 3.

"I've already made my appointment with my adviser and have my portfolio finished," Gapsch said.

"I know why the freshmen go last," Gapsch said. "Some of the upper classman have classes they need to take or else they'll have to wait to graduate. The freshmen aren't in as big a hurry."

Gapsch said the Banner System was fairly straightforward, and the explanation of the system during freshman orientation was very helpful.

Jonathan Fredrick, a junior accounting major from Cleveland, said he has already had his appointment and is waiting to register.

"It was kind of confusing at first, but you learn from trial and error," Fredrick said. "Banner System streamlines the way students register for classes. It is much easier once you get the hang of it. Being in control of which classes I'll be taking next semester is really nice."

The Banner System, which has been in place since the spring of 2007, has received a warm welcome from students and faculty alike.

"Students have more control over their own scheduling," Tucker Lowe said.

Appointment for new senator set for Friday Student Senate meeting

Alestle Staff Report

Student Government will look to round out its Senate at Friday's bi-weekly meeting.

The agenda includes a presidential appointment for a new senator, as well as other personnel appointments within Student Government committees.

University Planning and Budget Chair John Navin will serve as the afternoon's guest speaker, while the Senate will decide whether to approve a travel request from the Student Art Therapy Association and will look over two student organization constitutions and a student organization name change.

An open forum will ensue for any student wishing to address the Senate.

Student Government will be meeting Friday at 2 p.m. in the Morris University Center's International Room.

News can be reached at news@alestlelive.com or 650-3527.

ALCOHOL

Senior nursing major Bonnie Ly said drinking is a problem among the residence halls on campus.

"I know a lot of freshmen who drink in dorms, and they hide alcohol in their room," Ly said. "Freshmen should be aware of the dangers of drinking. They live at home their whole lives, and they come here and go buck-wild."

Freshman psychology major Nirali Contractor said students may not know the consequences of their drinking acts.

"If underage drinkers are caught they could get written up, ticketed and removed from campus, especially if you live in the dorms," Contractor said.

According to Ly and Contractor, there are ways administrators can control the problem of underage drinking.

"(Resident assistants) can inspect the dorm rooms and check for alcohol," Ly said.

Ly said Alcohol Awareness Week can teach people that alcohol can do a lot of damage to themselves and other.

Hill said it was important to learn about the dangers of alcohol, but also to have a good time during the events.

"Just come out, have fun," Hill said. "It's an educational experience, but fun is a big part of it."

For more information about Alcohol Awareness Week, students can contact Hill at 650-2197.

Note2Home.com lets parents monitor child's school activities

by Lindsay Dunham
Alestle Reporter

Balancing classes, work, homework, exams and a social life is a challenge for any college student, but senior accounting major Brian Kress added a home business to the mix, and people are taking notice.

Kress' business, Note2Home.com, won Kress the No. 9 spot in Startup Nation's 2008 Top 20 Dorm Based Businesses. Startup Nation is a resource Web site for entrepreneurs.

Kress' Note2Home.com is a Web site that gives parents a chance to monitor their child's attendance, grades, extracurricular activities and more online. The Web site is available for schools from elementary to high school.

According to a Startup Nation press release, the competition was based on innovativeness of business concept, potential growth, cutting-edge business practices, demonstration of business fundamentals, degree of talent exhibited by the founder, financial performance and potential overall impact.

Kress found out that Note2Home.com placed in the Top 20 Dorm Based Businesses through a friend.

"A judge sent me an e-mail about it, but my filter was set so high that I never got it," Kress said. "Then a friend called me and told me they saw my name and business on MSN Money."

Kress said the win shocked him and motivated him even more.

"The idea was to make it more convenient for parents to stay updated about their kids," Kress said. "And it's not just for parents. It's for schools, too."

Kress went on to explain that schools will often put aside $10,000 to $15,000 per year for this kind of software.

Who will win the election?

Two SIUE professors collaborate with members of University of Illinois to predict winner of the Obama, McCain race

By Brittany Zehr
Alestle Correspondent

When the dust settled after the 2000 presidential election and George Bush was declared the winner, SIUE statistics professors Steve Rigdon and Ed Sewell decided to take a closer look at the election process.

In the 2000 election, Bush won the Electoral College vote, but Democratic candidate Al Gore won the popular vote. The controversy over recounts eventually led to the Supreme Court, where it was decided Bush was the 43rd president.

Sewell and Rigdon collaborated with Sheldon Jacobson of the University of Illinois to be the backbone of a study that allows them to accurately predict the election.

Rigdon said they rely on results of state-by-state polling rather than the popular vote to make a fairly accurate prediction. They take the margins of error from each state poll and put them together to analyze the probability of each candidate winning.

The degree of accuracy was demonstrated in the 2004 election when Rigdon announced to his class that President Bush would take the race with 286 votes, the exact number he won to take the election.

Rigdon, Sewell, Jacobson and a slew of students at the University of Illinois are focusing on the Obama-McCain race these days.

On Sept. 30, Rigdon said if the election was held that day, Obama's chances of winning stood at 99 percent. Over the course of two weeks this changed to McCain being the frontrunner with 60 percent. Currently, Obama is back at the top of the predictions with over a 99 percent chance to win.

"Things are hard to predict, especially the future," Rigdon said. "We always make these predictions as if the election were today."

Rigdon said there are many factors that could easily change each candidate's chances between now and Nov. 4.

Their Web site has up to the minute updates by Jacobson and University of Illinois students.

The site provides slider models and different scenarios concerning the election. According to the site, poll information is currently being gathered from Rasmussen, Survey USA and Quinnipac, among others. These probabilities are then put into a series of instructions, also known as an algorithm. This determines the probability of the Electoral College votes each candidate will receive.

Rigdon said this prediction system is possible largely due to the predetermined political stance of many states. There are many strong Republican and strong Democratic states where each party's candidate is expected to win easily.

The few states that could go either way are the main factors. Rigdon said a current idea concerning the Obama-McCain race is that there could potentially be a tie, with New Hampshire as a key player. If McCain held Virginia and North Carolina, and then took New Hampshire, Rigdon said the votes could end up 269-269.

"I think what Dr. Rigdon is doing is great because it seems like a very reliable method, and the study will hopefully get SIUE in the news," biology major Catherine Nichols of Virden said.

The system may gain even more attention as the election gets closer, since it demonstrates how the popular vote sometimes gets overlooked when the final result is considered.

The study's Web site can be found at election08.cs.uiuc.edu/.

don't risk the case of someone taking them."

SIUE Police reports said most of the cars burglarized were unlocked when the theft occurred.

Schmoll said to contact the police immediately if you notice that a vehicle has been burglarized.

"Don't touch the vehicle, try to open it or take anything out of it so when our officers can get there they can search the vehicle for evidence," Schmoll said. "Maybe we could find fingerprints. We could lift or assess what has been stolen and best judge how the crime was committed."

Junior kinesiology major Josh Jausel said more can be done to protect students' cars.

"I work late at nights at the Wellness Center, (and) we use the buddy system walking out for individual safety reasons," Jausel said. "But for the vehicles, I think there should be cameras in the parking lots. The police are doing a good job, but I believe the cameras will help."

SIUE Police said people should be mindful of individuals riding around parking lots on bikes or in vehicles, and to watch out for people who appear to be wandering around the parking lot, looking into cars or trying to open car doors on different vehicles.

Schmoll said the best thing to do to deter theft is to be observant. He stressed that the first thing anyone should do is to call the police.

"It's best to call us first. Then we can handle the situation," Schmoll said.

BUSINESS

Note2Home.com is trying to be "a sort of Google for schools," Kress said. "It's a free application for schools to use, and we can both make a profit out of it. I was trying to create a win-win situation for both parties."

Kress said Note2Home.com is free as long as all features are being used, such as the online store.

The online store allows parents to buy school supplies online and a portion of the profit goes to the child's school.

"It's supposed to be a sort of one stop shop," Kress said.

The site also makes money from local advertising done on the site.

Kress said the idea for the Note2Home.com came to him his freshman year.

"It was about the time Facebook came out, and I thought of merging Facebook with Blackboard as a tool for parents," Kress said.

Kress spent a year taking notes and jotting down ideas for the site whenever they came to him.

"I had trouble sleeping because I would wake up during the night with more ideas," Kress said.

During his sophomore year, Kress started searching for a Web developing company so he could put his plan into action, and eventually got in touch with a company in Ukraine. After corresponding through e-mail and phone, Kress flew to Ukraine to meet with people from the company.

"Both guys I talked to directly are very education oriented, and we clicked really well," Kress said.

Note2Home.com is now up and running, and Kress said he has received calls from all over the U.S. from schools interested in trying Note2Home.com, but is waiting until after he graduates to tour the U.S. and promote his site.

Kress said the company took 30 to 40 hours a week during the development stages, but now he spends about 10 hours a week managing it.

"It consumes all of my weekends and most of my late nights," Kress said. "I usually stay up until one in the morning responding to e-mails."

Kress is also vice president of Student Government and said he has had to learn to manage time wisely.

"It comes down to learning how to delegate, and I've kind of systemized my life," Kress said. "I've learned how to filter things out."

Kress said he has hired a secretary five hours a week to take care of things he does not need to do himself.

Kristine Jarden, director of the SIUE Entrepreneurship Center, said she has been helping Kress with his business since the beginning and believes it is a good idea.

"I think it is a great interactive online resource for parents and teachers to interact with each other about many things," Jarden said.

Jarden said she is happy to see Note2Home.com is so successful.

"It's wonderful to see a student as motivated as Bryan pursue an endeavor," Jarden said. "I think Bryan has a great idea, and I hope he continues to pursue this and is successful."

American Apparel: designer or degrading?

Sexy or sexist? Designer or degrading? Where do we draw the line?

Style trends throughout the years have reflected the times and drawn light onto the subversive aspects of youth culture. The last ten years, and especially the last three, have brought the American Apparel company into the limelight. This Los Angeles based clothing manufacturer promises "green" enterprise and sustainability, boasting a wide array of candy colored, well-made clothing. Workers are offered more than twice the minimum wage pay in Illinois, free courses in English, as well as low-cost health care plans, a type of ethic and marketing strategy aimed at showing its key demographic of high school and college students that the company is one "for the people" and against sweatshop clothing production. American Apparel must be a godsend, right?

The looming negativity of American Apparel, which many fail to see, exists in the founder and CEO of the brand, Dov Charney. Charney is a 37 year old with the looks of a seedy 1970s porn star, and he's got the reputation to match.

Erika
Helmerichs

According to "Living on the Edge at American Apparel" from Business Week's Web site, since American Apparel's conception in 1997, Charney has been charged several times by employees with sexual harassment complaints, including allegations that he has exposed himself to workers and propositioned sex within the workplace. He has been known to speak openly about his sexual relations with women working at his company, as well as his pursuit of attractive female workers while at nightclubs.

In a deposition reported on by Josh Mankiewicz for NBC's "Dateline", Charney reportedly used terms like "slut" directed at his workers, with the defense that "some of us love sluts," and that his use of these degradations was "not meant pejoratively." He claims all of these acts are merely reflections of "free love," according to NBC report as well as in the previously mentioned article in Business Week.

The icing on the "sweatshop free" cake comes across in the ads American Apparel uses to sell merchandise, both online, in print and on billboards. Images of women in little clothing, with mussed hair and a look of "dirtiness" are often used to sell items like T-shirts and socks. Some ads portray only the backside of people, or show men and women entangled with one another in bed: all for the purpose of selling knit hoodies and canvas drawstring purses. Women are shown in tight tops with no bras, in back-bending awkward positions and with hands on sexually explicit body parts.

One particular ad that forces my skin to crawl shows a faceless crotch-shot image of a girl wearing tights with the word advertising "tight" (for the tights) in bold letters across the photo. What kind of message is this kind of campaign sending to buyers? How can we let Charney's degrading ethic represent a part of "hipster" culture so fully and entirely? These ads and this man are dangerous.

The goal of this drawn-out lecture on the horrors of sexism is a call to awareness (and hopefully action) from my peers. When you purchase products from American Apparel, you are supporting the ethical implications put across by the company's founder and his exploitation of female sexuality. I hope my peers are smarter than to support such a backward method of marketing which aims at making objects of women in order to sell clothing. There must be a point at which sexual degradation takes priority over those new v-neck tees.

Third party candidate: Doogie Howser for president in 2008

The election this November has been hailed as historic and one of the most important elections in American history. This election is also interesting because we are finally seeing activity among younger voters.

This year's debates are some of the most watched in recent years. However, rather than use this forum to their advantage and talk about the issues, the candidates are still attempting to use the debates to attack one another's previous positions. The debates have become another medium for the candidates to play the blame game. Many undecided Americans are still foggy on where the candidates differ on key issues.

With the economy, health care, education, the war in Iraq, the war in Afghanistan, North Korea, Iran, Pakistan and a whole slew of other issues on the minds of Americans, the need for change has become evident.

The bipartisan system has broken down, and it is time for America to seriously consider a third party, which can unite the undecided America under a single voice. What the nation needs is someone that has grown up under the public eye. What the nation needs is someone who America's youth can relate to, not another wrinkly old white dude. What we need is America's sweetheart, Neil Patrick Harris.

Harris, or as many citizens know him, Doogie Howser, M.D., is possibly one of the greatest actors to grace the silver screen. Some of his most notable appearances include "Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle," "Harold and Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay," "Starship Troopers," and the great film classic, "Undercover Brother." Harris's popularity has soared in recent years with his role as Barney in CBS's "How I Met Your Mother." His background includes theater, television, movies and even commercials.

The veteran of stage, screen and television is reminiscent of the golden boy of the '80s, Ronald Reagan. No matter what the role, Harris is sure to steal the spotlight. His blend of satire and comedic timing makes him perfect for any role, including the presidency. They could even make a sitcom out of the Harris administration to help boost the economy.

Harris is perfect for the White House. The issues that are so vital to American voters, which Sens. Obama and McCain have failed to make clear during the debates, are equally as unclear for Mr. Harris. The key difference is that no one knows where Harris stands on any issues. He's a wild card. You want change; Harris might be your man. You want a maverick; Harris might be your man. You want a candidate who will shake things up in the White House and has no ties to oil companies or any other Washington lobbyist; Harris is your man. Neil Patrick Harris: Your man, my man, the man.

Neil Patrick Harris is a beacon which all of America can align behind. Fortunately for all Americans, Neil Patrick Harris, who was born in Albuquerque, N.M., turned thirty-five this year, making him qualified for the presidency. Students of SIUE, I beseech thee, make this Nov. 4 a day when dreams come true, vote Doogie for president.

Karaoke competition in Morris University Center

As part of Homecoming Week 2008, Campus Activities Board hosted Live Band Karaoke in the Morris University Center's Goshen Lounge on Wednesday.

Students were allowed to sign up and sing through the competition as it was judged by members of the SIUE staff.

Prizes were awarded to first place, a tie was drawn between second and third place and a prize was awarded to fourth place.

The winning song, "Sweet Caroline," was sung by junior mass communications major Megan Brilley of Decatur. Members of the audience sang along.

"Nick & Nora's Infinite Playlist"

by Jeff Mason
Alestle Reporter

Most people have had one of those nights that start out like every other, but ends up being an Odyssey-like quest to return home. People get left behind, wrong turns get taken and not a lot of fun is had, yet these nights tend to be the most memorable. "Nick and Nora's Infinite Playlist" is a movie about one of those nights, mixing in a dose of relationship drama for good measure.

It all starts when a popular fictional band named "Where's Fluffy?" announces a secret show in New York City. Nick (Michael Cera, "Juno") and his two gay bandmates head into the city for an early performance before looking for "Where's Fluffy?"

Meanwhile, Nora (Kat Dennings, "The 40 Year-Old Virgin," "The House Bunny") and her best friend Caroline also decide to find Fluffy, but not before Caroline gets slap happy drunk at the same bar where Nick's band is playing. The two groups join forces in order to get the disposed damsel home and boost the confidence of the recently dumped Nick by matching him up with Nora.

"Nick and Nora" instantly feels like a future cult movie with its cast of young, relatively unknown actors, drifting plot line and humor that looks to get better over multiple viewings. Each character has the air of someone you could pass on the street or meet at a bar, and the urging on and bickering between each character feels natural.

The biggest feather in the cap of "Nick and Nora" has to be the scenery it flashes by. There aren't any over the top venues, only bars, convenience stores and streets that were actually shot on location in New York City. The blurred lights that fill the background of the screen also help give the feeling of actually being in the Big Apple.

Cera is at his usual, conservative-but-trendy self yet again in this movie, but opens up a bit more than in his previous movies. Dennings pulls her share as well and is often prey to awkward moments and unwanted situations which come through clearly thanks to her coy attitude throughout the movie. The rest of the young cast, who play everything from a gay guitarist to a sloshed teenager obsessed with her gum, work out perfectly under the control of director Peter Sollett.

Five years from now, there will probably be a cult following for "Nick and Nora." They'll love the movie for its conciseness, its glorious portrayal of NYC and its true-to-life situations and humor. It's not the funniest movie of the year, but it is original enough to stay in your mind after leaving the theater.

Cougar volleyball nears end of road with 5-9 record

Defeated by Indiana State University on Tuesday

by Allan Lewis
Alestle Reporter

Volleyball's offense was on display Tuesday night in Terre Haute, Ind., where the Cougars lost to Indiana State University as they near the end of a 14 game road stretch to start the season.

The Cougars, who are 5-9 on the season, dropped the game with scores of 25-22, 25-23, 21-25, 26-24.

The Sycamores of Indiana, led by Kelli Whitaker, took the match, outhitting SIUE .293 to .253, while the Cougars' offense accounted for 62 kills on the day in the losing effort. Whitaker led all players with a .486 hitting percentage and recorded 15 kills in the match.

"We just failed to get in on the key opportunities," Head Coach Todd Gober said.

Sophomore outside hitter Sydney Winslow paced the Cougars with 23 kills in the losing effort.

"(Winslow) had a huge performance, and (ISU) really had trouble stopping her," Gober said. "She just needed a little bit of help out there and was carrying a big load."

In the opener, ISU took an early 2-0 lead before the Cougars swung the momentum, opening up a five point lead. The Sycamores' offense came alive, however, tying the score at 14. SIUE would regain the lead scoring on the next point, but would fall short in the second half, as the Sycamores would pull out the 25-22 win.

"It is frustrating when you get to the end and can't finish things," Winslow said. "It would seem like we would get to the end and always struggle."

Gober said he came away from the match disappointed with his team's performance in clutch situations and said being competitive and staying in matches at the Division I level is not enough for his experienced squad.

"We are a finishing team and have to get that mentality back to finish a set or match," Gober said. "We are better than this and need to find ways to pull wins out."

Game two was another close battle, and once again the Cougars found themselves coming up short of the win. The set was tight early, as both teams exchanged blows before ISU went on a short run, taking an 18-14 lead into an SIUE timeout.

The Cougars found enough momentum coming out of the break to get the game within a point at 18-17 on a kill from senior setter Mallory Clements.

The effort proved futile as ISU rallied at the end of the match, going up 2-0. SIUE found a way to climb back into the match in the third game with a 25-21 triumph.

The Cougars came out of the gate on a 7-1 run, which included four kills from Winslow and two from senior middle hitter Sam Schulte. ISU would calm the Cougars' attack, keeping the set close and getting within two points of winning at 22-20.

Gober called a timeout in hopes of keeping the match from

Men's golf finished seventh at Butler University Fall Invitational

Two-day tournament at Illinois State University scheduled for the weekend, looking for a strong finish

by Levi Kirby
Alestle Reporter

SIUE junior Matt Lehl finished in the top 20 at the Butler University Fall Invitational Monday and Tuesday, helping lead the SIUE men's golf team to a seventh place finish with a team score of 875 after three rounds.

Lehl finished tied for 13th with a three over par individual score of 216.

"(Day two) was a day of struggles. We could have easily played better," Lehl said. "Sometimes you just have days like that, and it looks like every one of us had that day today."

SIUE was as high as fourth place in day one, but a rough second day took them down to seventh out of 14 teams.

The University of Indianapolis took first place overall with a team score of 840, followed by Creighton University, Morehead State University at third, the host team Butler, Eastern Illinois University and Wright State University, who just edged out the Cougars for sixth place by a mere four strokes.

It was only the Cougars' second Division I tournament of the year, and Lehl said determination and experience is helping the team get results.

"We are always up at the top. Now we have the mentality that we can actually compete with these guys," Lehl said. "We have that in our heads now. It is a different mindset this year."

SIUE senior Tyler Link said it is fun playing with the new D-I competition.

"Now we are playing against new teams with people that aren't familiar with us," Link said. "We get to go out there and show them what we've got."

"We are always at the top. Now we have the mentality that we can actually compete with these guys."

- Matt Lehl,

SIUE sophomore Neal McCarty, who finished first at the Murray State Invitational last week, followed Lehl's lead and tied for 21st with a score of 218. Link also shot a 218 followed by senior Matt Muckensturm who took 61st place with a 227. Sophomore Nick Nuzzo tied for 71st with a 230.

"Individually, I didn't play as well as I wanted to," McCarty said. "I think I was putting too much pressure on myself after coming off a win last week because in your mind you want to do it again."

Despite shooting 11 strokes higher on day three, Link said he was happy with his performance and the team's overall performance.

"Me and the team both made significant progress," Link said. "I am proud of the way I am going, and I couldn't be any more proud of the team. We got a new start and got off to the right start."

Unlike the women's team, the men have one more tournament before the end of the fall season.

The Cougars head to Illinois State University in Normal on Sunday for a two-day tournament. Link said they will be ready and he is confident with the way he and the team are playing.

"We are looking to finish strong," Lehl said. "And I think we will."

Men's soccer homecoming game Friday

Alestle Staff Report

SIUE men's soccer hosts McKendree University for the homecoming game at 7 p.m. Friday at Korte Stadium.

It is the first home game for the Cougars, one of only three this season.

SIUE senior goalkeeper Nick Frasca said he is excited to finally play at home in front of friends and family.

"It's going to be great to be home," Frasca said. "Especially if we have a good crowd, and it's on homecoming weekend. It will be a breath of fresh air."

The Cougars have not been in action since they lost to Dayton University on Sept. 26.

SIUE last played McKendree over five years ago on Sept. 4, 2003, when Cal Thomas and Addae Rique led the Cougars to a 3-1 victory.

Donald Sheehan, McKendree's assistant coach, is an alumnus of SIUE.

"We know all about him (Sheehan) and what he represents," Frasca said. "So they will be a good team to go against."

The Cougars will play two more home games in a row after Friday. They play Jefferson University on Wednesday at 7 p.m., and they take on the SIUE alumni at 6 p.m. on Oct. 17.

"Being in the home atmosphere is like having a 12th player on the field," Frasca said. "It has been that way in previous seasons, and I am sure it will be the same this year."

Season ends for women's golf at Butler University

Alestle Staff Report

SIUE women's golf concluded their fall season with an eighth place finish at the Butler University Fall Women's Golf Invitational Monday and Tuesday with the help of junior Sarah Gereaux, who tied for 12th individually.

Gereaux shot a 79 in round one, a season best. On day two she shot another season best with a 77, lowering her average to 82.8 strokes per round to finish the fall season.

SIUE finished with a team score of 646, topping the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay, who shot a 674 and the University of Illinois-Springfield with a 711.

Butler won the tournament with a score of 613.

Gereaux led the Cougars with her season best rounds and finished with a score of 156. SIUE senior Megan Hood tied for 27th place with a 161. Freshman Courtney Lovegreen tied for 30th place, two strokes behind Hood with a 163. Senior Kristin Fischer shot a 166 and tied for 37th, and junior Sheena Collins tied for 47th with a 175.

The Cougars don't see any more action until the spring season begins on March 2 in Murray, Ky.

slipping away, and it proved successful, as the win earned the Cougars a fourth set in the match.

The swing of momentum coming off the third set win didn't propel the Cougars' comeback effort, as ISU squeaked out with the victory in the finale. SIUE was a point away from forcing a tiebreaker, as Whitaker put away the final two kills.

"Everyone was disappointed," Schulte said. "It was an opportunity to take away a win, and we let it pass us by."

Gober said he hopes his team can learn how to put opponents away in the second half in future games.

"This is a tough time for this team since they are so used to winning," Gober said. "I do believe we will get over this, and this year is setting the foundation and future success of this program. We have a lot of pride and tradition and have to continue working hard."

The Cougars will close out the longest road trip in program history Friday at Eastern Kentucky University before their first home match of the season against the U.S. Air Force Academy for homecoming on Saturday. SIUE will host the game at 7 p.m. at Lincoln Middle School in Edwardsville because the Vadalabene Center remains unfit for play during the renovation.
